Content Pillar Ideas

Your Practice

How I work - Your philosphy, you approach, your non-negotiables. This is where people decide whether they trust you before they ever book you.

What a session acutally involves - demystify the expereience. Most people might not have had a session and don't know what happens or what to expect, or to even wear.

What happens after a session - the integration or what the body and energy do after the work is done. Not spoken about enough.

Your Modality

What it is - Not the official version, but your version. Write it out in your words, and the words your clients use, not the professional version you learned while learning.

The Questions people are afraid to ask - Every practitioner has a list of questions they hear constantly, these are your FAQs. Share them.

Who it is for - Be specific. The more clearly you describe who your work is for, the more they recognise themselves in your posts

You

Why I do this work - Your origin story. The moment, the realisation, or the slow accumulation of experiences that led you here. You don't have to share everything. Just what is true and relevant.

What I'm still learning - What you're currently studying or exploring, whether it be continual education or PD. This signals commitment to your craft and models what it looks like to keep growing.

My own practice - What do you do to stay regulated, grounded and resourced as a practitioner. Authenticity over vulnerability performance.

Space + Care

How you prepare for a session - Your rituals, your setup, the way you arrive for a client. This is great for building trust, it shows your work has intention behind it.

Boundaries in practice - What you hold and what you don't. This content will attract clients who respect you and your time while filtering out those who don't.

Seasonal + Cyclical

What the body needs in (season) - Seasonal bodywisdom gives you four built-in content angles a year and is endlessly relevant because the seasons always come back

Rest as a practice - For you and for your clients. Rest is an important aspect and deeply relevant, more so when you have people coming to you because they are running on empty.
